HEALTHY WORKERS – HEALTHY FUTURES

STEP TWO TOOLS: HEALTHY WORKPLACE AUDIT
WORKPLACE AUDIT

The Healthy Workplace Audit assists you to record current or pre-existing strategies, identify areas of untapped potential and consider areas of interest to set your workplace health and wellbeing goals.

+ Where your business has several sites, a separate audit should be completed for each site.
+ It is anticipated the audit will take approximately 15 minutes.
+ The audit is broken up into categories:
  - People: Addresses individual worker needs around their health, such as improving access to services, information, events and activities that improve the health knowledge and skills of workers.
  - Places: Addresses the workplace environment, facilities, equipment and use of local services that enable or prevent healthy behaviours.
  - Vision: Encourages the business to consider how day to day practices and its culture might support and encourage healthy behaviours.

How to use the Audit

1. Respond to each prompt by selecting the response that best describes your workplace currently:
   - Yes
     - You have in place a quality approach that meets workplace needs.
   - Working Towards
     - You have a good idea of what is needed and are considering or taking small steps to ensure it happens.
   - No
     - You have not considered nor currently doing that action.

2. Tally the number of ticks against each ‘yes,’ ‘no’ and ‘working towards’ for the three categories: people, places and vision.

3. Use the information and your ideas to consider the top health and wellbeing priorities for your workplace. You can use these to develop a workplace action plan, using the Healthy Workers – Healthy Futures Workplace Action Plan template (see Step 3: Healthy Workers – Healthy Futures toolkit).

4. Repeat audit once you have implemented your action plan to capture changes and celebrate your successes.

This Audit has a focus on smoking, nutrition, alcohol, physical activity and emotional wellbeing in line with the Healthy Workers – Healthy Futures toolkit:

‘Step by Step guide to developing a successful workplace program’ available at www.sahealth.sa.gov.au/healthyworkers

This Healthy Workplace Audit was developed by the SA Health Healthy Workers – Healthy Futures initiative. Updated May 2019.
COMMUNICATION

1. Messages promoting good health are displayed
   - e.g. posters, pamphlets

2. Health-related information is regularly communicated to all workers
   - e.g. articles in newsletters, program activities and events, intranet, toolbox talks

PARTICIPATION AND PROGRAMS

3. Workplace determines needs and interests of workers
   - e.g. surveys, meeting discussion

4. Information and programs offered reflect the interests and needs of workers

5. Qualified health professionals are used when running health related programs/events/training or information sessions in the workplace

WORKERS HAVE ACCESS TO SUFFICIENT, HIGH QUALITY...

6. Physical activity classes, workshops or teams at or near workplace
   - e.g. team challenges, walking groups, subsidised community fitness membership

7. Healthy eating activities or programs
   - e.g. lunchbox challenge, local health services

8. Quit smoking programs or support
   - e.g. Quitline, nicotine replacement therapy

9. Healthy lifestyle coaching services
   - e.g. Online and phone coaching e.g. Get Healthy

10. Social and emotional wellbeing related programs, activities or support
    - e.g. addressing stress, work-life balance, financial management, bullying, support through Employee Assistance Program (EAP) or promotion of online/phone counselling support, mindfulness, meditation, yoga, employee recognition schemes

11. Preventative health screening or immunisations
    - e.g. skin checks, hearing assessments, flu vaccinations

12. Social events for workers, families and community

COMMITMENT, RESOURCING AND CULTURE

1. Commitment to health and wellbeing is evidenced in business plans, values or strategic documents
2. Management participate in health and wellbeing activities
3. Financial resources (in addition to staff time) are dedicated to workplace health
4. Strategies are in place to upskill key workers on workplace health and wellbeing e.g. through training
5. Workers have an opportunity to raise health and wellbeing issues
6. Program and activities are offered to all workers i.e. across shifts, roles, locations
7. Wellbeing program and activities are regularly reviewed and improved

POLICY / PROCEDURE / DOCUMENTATION

8. Policies or procedures support healthy food options e.g. catering, vending machines, fundraisers, on-site sales
9. Policies or procedures support physical activity opportunities e.g. active transport, reducing sedentary practices
10. Policies or procedures support responsible alcohol consumption for workers and visitors
11. Policies or procedures support smoke-free environments
12. Policy or procedures support mental wellbeing e.g. flexible working arrangements, anti-discrimination and bullying, workload management, psychosocial risk management, mental health first aid and other training
13. Health and wellbeing related policies or procedures are developed and reviewed in consultation with workers

How confident are you in your organisation’s ability to implement workplace health and wellbeing strategies?

How confident do you feel in your own ability to take action and support workplace health and wellbeing strategies?

Top priorities and planning comments:
CHECK YOUR RESULTS

MOSTLY YES:

If you have ticked mostly yes, your result indicates that your workplace has a considered and structured health and wellbeing program that suits the needs and wishes of your employees.

Congratulations on your efforts to date!

It is important to regularly review the goals and actions of your program according to the needs and interests of your employees. Don’t forget to consider new and exciting activities, including those in your local area, new campaigns and health events. Keeping your program in the spotlight with regular promotion ensures ongoing enthusiasm, commitment and support from both employees and managers.

Consider submitting a case study for publication via healthyworkers@sa.gov.au.

Other workplaces would love to hear about your success and how you achieved it.

MOSTLY WORKING TOWARDS:

If you have ticked mostly working towards, your result indicates that there are some good backbones to your program and your workplace is keen to support healthy behaviours. Getting to this point often takes dedication and commitment. Well done and keep up the good work!

There may still be some gaps in planning, resourcing, activity range or changes may be needed to workplace facilities.

Consider each step within the Healthy Workers – Healthy Futures toolkit to guide you through areas of ongoing development.

It might be important to now consider whether you are putting your resources into activities that will give you the strongest outcomes (for the business and its workers). Consider asking key colleagues about their needs and wishes for the program; you may find this gives your program renewed energy and direction.

Don’t forget to regularly remind employees of opportunities to participate.

MOSTLY NO:

If you have ticked mostly no, your result indicates that you are just starting out or have some idea of what your workplace is missing. By participating in the audit, you have taken an important step towards creating a healthy workplace. Well done!

Remember that not all strategies have to be highly resourced or time intensive; small changes can often promote and create healthy behaviours. Consider how you can build on any efforts made so far.

Take the time to look through Healthy Workers – Healthy Futures case studies to see what other workplaces have achieved www.sahealth.sa.gov.au/healthyworkers.

Some of the essential elements of creating a health and wellbeing program include assessing the needs of workers, obtaining commitment and support of both workers and management, and monitoring the program. It may be useful to refer to the Healthy Workers – Healthy Futures toolkit to take you through these steps.
